Taking the Lead

Although rain washed out the traditional alumni parade, Marion Coppelman Epstein ’24, of Boston, and Philip Keene ’25, S.M. ’40, of Middletown, Connecticut, the two oldest alumni present, were publicly honored and had seats of honor on the stage. They turn 100 within four days of each other in October. (John Heagan Eames ’22, of Boothbay Harbor, Maine, who had led the parade for three years in a row, died in May.)

According to the University’s records at press time, the 10 oldest alumni are James George Jameson ’22, 102, of Orlando, Florida; Charles Henry Warner ’21, 102, of Berkeley, California; Evelyn Gerstein Garfield ’22, 102, of Huntington, New York; Catriona Cole White ’21, 102, of Farmington, Connecticut; Lillian E. Barclay ’23, 101, of Boston; Helen Parker Jochum ’22, 101 of Bloomfield, Connecticut; Sheridan Ashton Logan ’23, 101, of Saint Joseph, Missouri; Margaret James MacDonald ’23, 101, of Stanley, Perthshire, Scotland; Albert Hamilton Gordon ’23, 101, of New York City; and Gertrude Reid Browne ’23, 100, of Seattle.

Much more of Harvard than many alumni may know is available remotely via the Internet. Simply by visiting www.harvard.edu/-listing/ you can reach an alphabetical index of several hundred websites, each easily accessible through built-in electronic links. Many of these—the destination sites for each school, for example—are themselves deep, rich sources of information on academic programs, course listings, faculty members’ biographies and research, and more.

Harvard community members worldwide may want to sample these resources, so the magazine’s staff will occasionally highlight a few particularly rewarding online destinations in these pages.

For example, Radcliffe Institute dean Drew Gilpin Faust’s biographical page (www.radcliffe.edu/about/faust.html) now has a link to a PDF version of “Mingling Promiscuously: A History of Women and Men at Harvard,” her bracing lecture to the Harvard class of 2003. The institute’s home page, www.radcliffe.edu, provides information about its lecture series and fellowship and other programs.

Can’t get to the Kennedy School to attend events at the ARCO Forum? They may be viewed on video at www.iop.harvard.edu/forum.html, where you may also obtain print summaries. Similarly, the Law School offers webcasts of presentations by faculty members and outside speakers, at www.law.harvard.edu/-news/webcasts. In both cases, you will need to have, or to download, RealPlayer, using links provided at the sites.

Don’t forget that this magazine is available electronically at www.harvardmagazine.com. (You can register for e-mail updates and highlights of each new issue at our website.) Alumni also have access to harvard@home via the HAA’s Post.Harvard site (www.haa.harvard.edu/); new features include an overview of contemporary China by Roderick MacFarquhar, Williams professor of history and political science, and a symposium in which five faculty research scientists discuss their work.

Off to England…

Chosen from the record number of 151 applicants, four seniors won Harvard-Cambridge Scholarships to study at Cambridge University for one year.

Trevor S. Cox, of Lexington, Virginia, and Pforzheimer House, will matriculate as the Lt. Charles Henry Fiske III Scholar at Trinity College; John N. Friedman, of Cambridge and Lowell House will be the John Eliot Scholar at Jesus College; Vera A. Keller, of Rifton, N.Y., and Dudley House, will enroll as the Harvard-Pembroke Scholar at Pembroke College; and Damian Williams, of Stone Mountain, Georgia, and Dunster House, will study at Emmanuel College as the Lionel de Jersey Harvard Scholar.
