For the Love of Horses

Contemporary echoes of nineteenth-century sport
by NELL PORTER BROWN

Equestrian life and sports have long shaped Boston's North Shore. In the late nineteenth century, that primarily agricultural region, with industrial hot spots along the coast and Merrimack River, evolved into "the premiere summer colony of affluent Bostonians, many of whom were avid equestrians," according to a new exhibit at the Wenham Museum: "They rode, hunted, drove carriages, played polo and tennis, swam, and sailed their yachts and steam launches."

Within a 25-mile radius of the museum, says its director of external affairs, Peter G. Gwinn, sporting grounds and facilities for fox hunting, polo, dressage, and three-day eventing emerged over time, drawing riders and fans from across the world. The exhibit strives to "bring riders and non-riders together to learn about, and share, the importance of these sports and traditions," he adds. "We also hope to highlight the land, and the importance—to everyone—of open landscapes and conservation, which all began here because of the love of horses."

A continual driver of these traditions is the Myopia Hunt Club, in abutting South Hamilton, with its fox hunts, polo grounds, and golf course (designed in 1894 by Herbert Corey Leeds, A.B. 1877). It was established by a group largely composed of Harvard graduates, and, apart from two wartime breaks, polo players have competed on Myopia's Gibney Field on summer Sundays since 1887.

Those matches, held this year from June 2 to September 29, are still open to the public. The $15 tickets are sold on site the day of a game; tailgating parties before and during the match are allowed. In addition, the Harvard Polo Club and its men's and women's teams—which feature in the museum exhibit, along with current head coach Crocker Snow Jr. '61, a Myopia
A growing group of pioneers are changing how people think about Assisted Living in a big way. They’re forming new bonds and encouraging one another to embrace a new sense of independence in The Woodlands Inn community.

DISCOVER MORE

Call 978-228-3878 or visit WoodlandsatEdgewood.com

575 Osgood Street, North Andover, MA 01845
Harvard connections to the region’s equestrian community run deep, as the exhibit reveals. Myopia’s predecessor, Myopia 9, was a baseball club formed and named, half-jokingly, by a group that included four near-sighted sons of Boston mayor and steeplechase racer Frederick O. Prince, A.B. 1836. They all played baseball at Harvard, and built the original club house in 1879 in Winchester. Many in the group, however, soon became infatuated with fox hunting. By 1883, the club was officially re-christened Myopia Hunt Club and relocated to South Hamilton, where members brought a pack of hounds over from England and purchased the Gibney Farm (its main building still serves as the clubhouse) with Harvard polo player Randolph M. Appleton, A.B. 1884, serving as Master of the Hounds from 1883 to 1900. Since 1952 the club’s hunts, which currently run through numerous open-land trails, from Essex and Ipswich to Newburyport, have been “drag hunts”: they follow a pre-laid scent instead of live prey.

Polo, perhaps the world’s oldest team sport, took root in America in the 1870s, and spread to Danvers, Wenham, and Hamilton, the exhibit notes, where spectators arrived “by train, carriage and coach” to enjoy “half-time teas and divot-stamping—but it was the breathtaking speed and the ever-present possibility of risk that gave polo its loyal local following.”

Harvard played an integral role here, too. It formed the first United States intercollegiate polo team in 1883, and in 1890 moved its ponies and operations to land offered by Myopia; the two clubs were among the five charter members of the U.S. Polo Association in 1891. After a decades-long up-and-down history during the second half of the past century, Harvard polo revived in 2006 (see “Polo Renaissance,” November-December 2007, page 85) largely through “horses, a stable, and financial support,” the exhibit notes, from famous actor Tommy Lee Jones ’69, a veteran polo player himself. Its Hamilton equestrian center, a refurbished historic horse farm, opened in 2014.

Although American polo and other equestrian sports are typically expensive, rarefied pursuits, these traditions have influenced the regional character of the North Shore, affecting its residents, economy, and topography. In developing this new exhibit, the Wenham Museum—best known as a family-friendly place with an extensive model-train gallery and collections of antique dolls and toys—is building on its mission to “share local histories that continue to have a connection to and important impact on current and future generations,” Gwinn says. “Equestrian Histories’ offers a fun look back at the origins of horse in sport in New England—and beyond—and vivifies, for all ages, the universal values of sport activity, animal appreciation, and ongoing preservation of today’s North Shore landscapes.”

—NELL PORTER BROWN